

Note on contributors

Oana Ghiocea is a Political Science student in her last year of MA at the National University of Political Science and Public Administration of Bucharest, Romania. Having obtained a BA in the same field in 2016, she went on to study Public Policy, with the aim of in-depth exploring the topic of Higher Education Policy for her thesis. Issues such as freedom of choice, equality of opportunity and access, egalitarianism (especially luck egalitarianism) and human rights are among her areas of interest.

Nino Gozalishvili is currently an MA student at the Central European University, specializing in Nationalism Studies. Her main area of research is Eastern Europe with a focus on rise of National-Populism and issues related to the EU integration. Currently she is researching the global rise of populism, and internalization of cyber-populism. She is a graduate of Tbilisi State University, department of International Relations. In the past, she has been a visiting student at University of Warsaw department of Political Science and European University Viadrina Frankfurt (Oder), at the department of Social and Cultural Studies.

William J. Jones teaches International Relations at Mahidol University International College in Nakhon Pathom, Thailand. He currently serves as Program Director of the Social Science Division. He is currently a Ph.D Candidate and his dissertation is on the politics and development of the ASEAN Intergovernmental Commission on Human Rights. His publications and research interests are on contemporary Thai politics, ASEAN and European Union integration and human rights in ASEAN and Southeast Asia.

Kussai Haj-Yehia, PhD, is a senior lecturer and head of the Master Degree Program in Education and Arab Culture at Beit Berl Academic College, Israel. He has completed his post-doctoral studies in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Guelph in Canada and the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Tel Aviv University in Israel. His research deals with Internationalization of Higher Education, Palestinian Arab Students Mobility, and Migration for Studies Abroad and Palestinian Arab Graduates from Israel. He has published many books and articles in Arabic, Hebrew and English on these topics. His books include “Dream and Reality: Arab University Graduates from Germany” published in Tel Aviv 2002, and “The Internationalization of Higher Education: Student’s Mobility among Arabs in Israel” with Khalid Arar, published by Alayyam 2014, and “The Higher Education and the Palestinian Arab Minority in Israel” with Khalid Arar, published by Palgrave Macmillan, USA.

Douglas Rhein teaches Psychology and Media at Mahidol University International College in Nakhon Pathom, Thailand. He currently serves as the Chair of the Social Science Division. He has lived in Thailand for over twenty years. Born in the United States, he studies at universities in the USA, Thailand, England and Australia, working in psychology and communications. Before coming to Thailand, he worked in China, Korea, and Japan. He is currently a doctoral candidate in educational psychology, doing research on cross cultural adjustment and leadership in Asia. Currently, Douglas Rhein lectures in many areas of psychology at Mahidol as well as being a key instructor support manager, an education researcher, and a leadership and communications facilitator at many leading multinational corporations in Bangkok. He regularly works with government and private companies conducting various corporate workshops across Asia. Areas of training include education, leadership, operations, safety, and cross cultural communications.

Vlad Andrei Terteleac currently studies Political Science at the National University of Political and Administrative Studies in Bucharest. His main research interests revolve around normative theory, particularly left and right libertarian theories, the debate on universal basic income and the ethics of immigration.

Matteo Zanellato is a PhD Candidate at the National University of Political Studies and Public Administration (SNSPA), Bucharest, Romania and alumnus of University of Padua, Italy. His research interests are in the fields of political studies, the philosophy of technology and justice.